ABSTRACT

This directory of women and minority men in academic journalism and mass communication lists the names, degrees, teaching experience, and specialties of over 400 teachers. The directory is a result of national surveys conducted in 1972 and 1974 with the support of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Status of Women of the Association for Education in Journalism. The directory is intended to aid administrators and search committees seeking prospective faculty members, and it should also be useful in selecting guest speakers and visiting seminar participants. INTRODUCTION

In forming its first Ad Hoc Committee on the Status of Women in 1973, the Association for Education in Journalism recognized the increasing need to identify its women members and those minority men and women teaching or planning to teach in colleges and universities offering journalism education. The first committee began this directory by surveying some 350 women journalism educators from AEJ and other listings. Three mailings brought some 200 responses. The 1974 committee followed with an additional mailing to about 200 names, including many new names, doctoral students and minority men. About 100 responses were received. This directory is the result of that two-year survey. Because of the time-lag between the survey and its publication, there will undoubtedly be some errors resulting from new jobs, promotions and degrees conferred. For your aid, each 1972 entry has been identified with an asterisk.

The directory is intended to aid administrators and search committees seeking prospective faculty members. It should be useful in selecting guest speakers and visiting seminar participants. It will certainly begin the task of identifying the growing numbers of academic women in this field. It is not a job roster, however, and listing here does not necessarily mean that one wishes to move to a new position. The AEJ national office maintains a job roster and positions and job seeking notices are published in the AEJ Newsletter.

The questionnaires brought some detailed responses, but the editors and their student assistants had to summarize much of the information. These guidelines were used:

1- Degrees: Degrees conferred and dates (when given) were listed, and students were listed as "in progress toward the M.A. (or master's, if unclear) or Ph.D.," and this included those expecting degrees in 1974. Candidates for the doctorate were specified and Fulbright and other special fellowships were noted.

2- Teaching Specialties: Limited to journalism, mass communication and occasionally speech.

3- Teaching Experience: Limited to teaching in journalism, mass communication, broadcasting and public relations courses in colleges and universities and some secondary school teaching. The current position, school name and address and date started are included. The next last teaching position is listed, but beyond that, teaching experience is summarized by type and number of years. Teaching fellowships and research assistantships were included.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

4- Professional Experience: Limited to communications or communication-related jobs, including newspaper, radio, television, wire service, public relations, house organ, magazine and information research (if noted). Summer internships and summer media jobs were included. The current job, title, date started and work address (if not currently teaching) were given. Previous employment was summarized by media type, executive position, and number of years, as carefully as was possible from the information provided.

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Status of Women would appreciate receiving corrections and requests for questionnaires from those who would like to be listed in the addenda. Requests for additional copies of the directory should be directed to: Professor Quintus Wilson, AEJ Executive Secretary, 118 Reavis Hall, Northern Illinois University, DeKalb, Ill. 60115. There will be a small charge to cover mailing costs.
